Email sent to author as acceptance.

Click on the “click here” button, it takes the author to the funding page.

The screenshot shows an email header with the ACS Publications logo and tagline, and navigation links for submitting research, learning about open access, and asking about journal access. The main body of the email is addressed to Dr. Vachhani and congratulates them on an accepted manuscript in the Journal of Agricultural and Food Chemistry. It explains that publishing open access increases visibility and impact, and offers to help with funder mandates. A blue link labeled "Click here" is circled in red, leading to open access licensing options. The email also provides information on self-depositing manuscripts and a contact email for support.

Dear Dr. Vachhani,

Congratulations on your accepted manuscript in Journal of Agricultural and Food Chemistry.

Publishing open access allows you to increase the visibility and impact of your published work and can help you meet funder mandates. Before your article goes into production, we would like to let you know about open access licensing options offered by ACS. Click here if you are interested in our Open Access Options or to complete your order for open access.

If you have questions as to what your funding agency requires, please visit ACSFunderOptions

Please note you may also self-deposit your accepted manuscript for availability 12 months after publication to your funder repository with no required fee. A PDF version of your accepted manuscript is readily available within ACS Paragon Plus for you to submit to your funder repository.

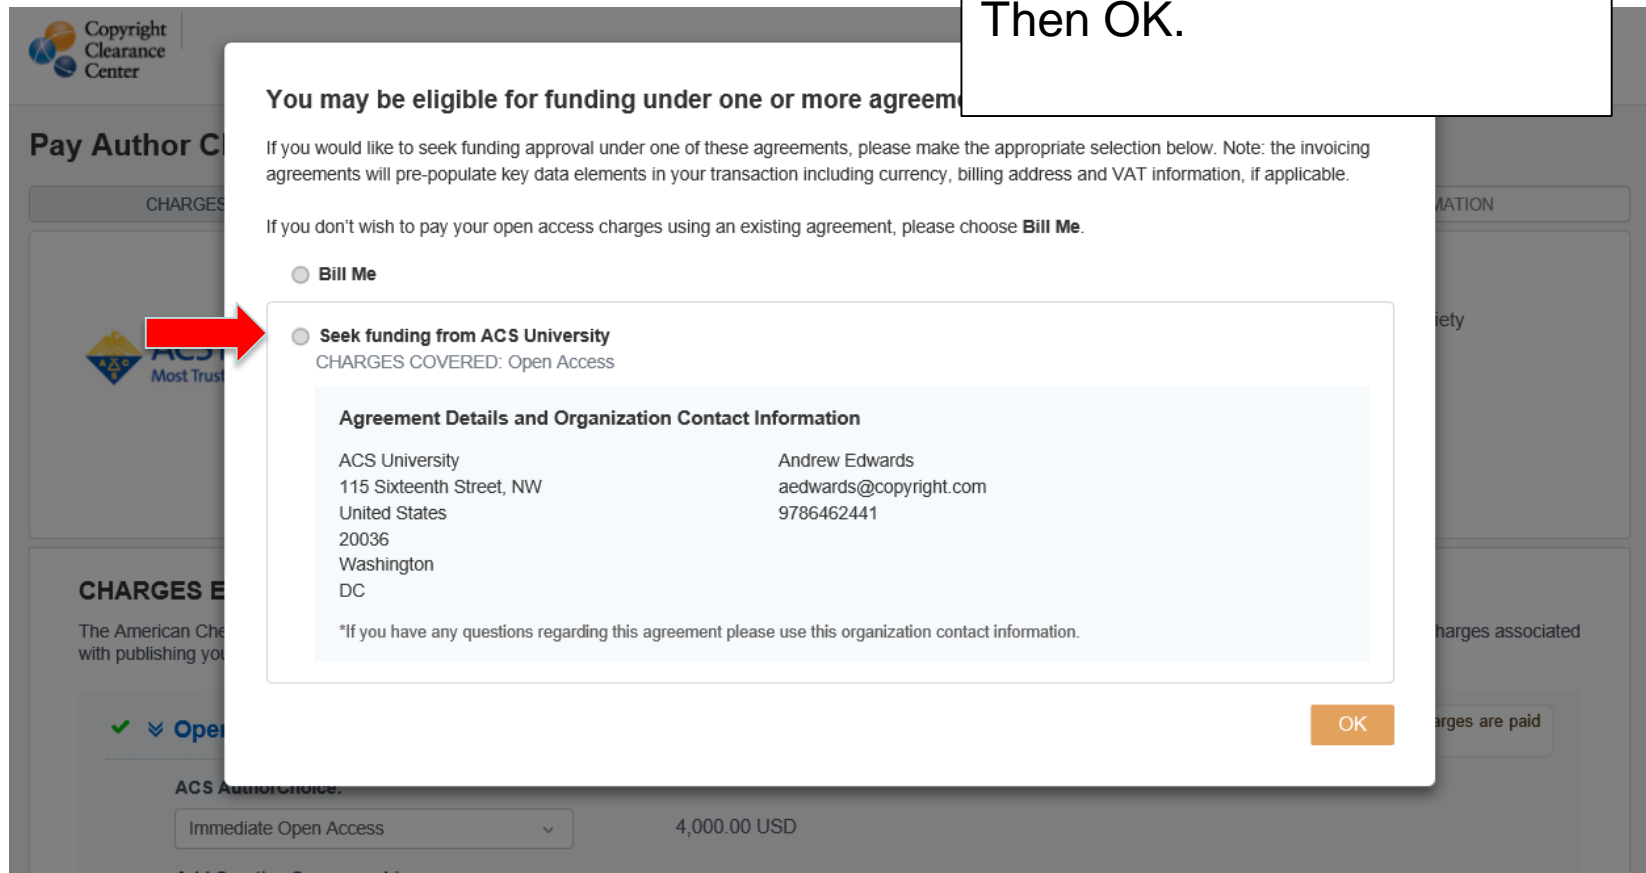

If you need additional assistance, contact support@services.acs.org.

Thank you for choosing ACS Publications as your partner.
